With Two on Bases.

By THOMAS S. RICE.

By displaying a glimmer of human reason in the matter of keeping Falkenberg out of the box the Washington club beat Cleveland here 3 to 1 yesterday.

There were several exceptionally fine opportunities for letting Falkenberg take the slab and make a wild pitch that would give Cleveland enough runs to win, but Manager Cantillon nobly refrained from adopting this course, and the lead once gained was never overthrown. If the world keeps moving at this rate we may some day expect to see the two major leagues employ the double umpire system or a sportsmanlike spirit arise among the English.

Hughes at His Best.

Charley Smith, who has been an uncertain quantity all season, started for Washington, and more by good luck than good management was not touched for more than one run. He made a triple in the fourth round after Cleveland had reached him for a triple and two singles in his half of the game, and was so winded by his exertions that he retired in favor of Tom Hughes.

The bridegroom was in his best form and treated the crowd to several notable stunts. In the first place, he allowed Cleveland two hits in the last five rounds. In the second place, after allowing a hit and giving two passes in the eighth inning, thereby filling the bases with one out, he fanned Perring, and the side was retired when Bemis, who batted for Birmingham, forced Hinchman. Throughout Hughes showed his usual reserve speed in pinches.

Smith's Remarkable Feat.

The best single pitching feat of the day was by Smith. He opened the second inning with a double to right. Hinchman sacrificed to Smith, who was dead slow in handling the ball, and Hinchman beat his throw to third, to say nothing of Shipke dropping it to make sure of the runner's safety. Hinchman stole second, and a critical situation arose right there. It was dollars to doughnuts that Cleveland would score, but that team has a knack of falling down in our town, and felt this time with an awful crash. Smith fanned Perring, Birmingham, and Rhoades. We don't remember a similar case in the major this season, and Smith deserved a large bouquet.

A sorry incident was an accident to Street in the first inning. Bradley was at bat and made a foul tip on an especially fast shot. It came back with such force it broke the catcher's mask and jammed a piece of the iron framework into his forehead, making a nasty cut which bled so freely he had to give way to Jack Warner. The injured hero was around town last night with his head pathetically bandaged, but declaring he would be well in a short time.

Hits and Errors Combine.

Washington won because when it got next to Rhoades' delivery in the fourth inning that was just the time for his support to wobble. In fact, had his trusty comrades done their share Washington would not have scored. There were several other occasions when the Nationals had a good look-in, but Rhoades always tightened up.

The making of the three runs was thus:

Clymer started the fourth inning for Washington with a pop fly to Perring. Warner walked, and when Freeman got his third strike Jack astonished the

BRIGHT OUTLOOK
FOR WASHINGTONDelehanty and Unglaub
Should Improve the Present
Good Work.SHOELESS WONDER
TIPPED IN SOUTHVisitor From Greenville, S. C.,
Chants Praises of Joe Jackson,
Thinking and Hitting Fielder.

With the actual arrival of Bob Unglaub, and the prospect of Jim Delehanty getting back to business this week, the outlook for the Washington club is much brighter.

As it is, the team has been doing well of late. Four out of five games were taken from New York, one out of four from Chicago, with a sixteen-inning tie; three out of five from St. Louis, and two out of three from Cleveland, makes a record of ten won and seven lost since the club returned from its long trip. Out of the seven games lost, at least one, and possibly two, were plain gifts to the opposition in the mind of the average fan, because of mistakes in handling the pitching problem. Thus it will be seen that the club is now playing somewhere near the strength it shows on paper when the team is examined man by man.

Delehanty and Unglaub can both hit any kind of pitchers more or less at any time, and Delehanty is especially effective against the interminable array of southpaws which is lined up against Washington whenever the other team has left-handed slabsmen. Unglaub will be a handy asset to plug most any hole in the infield, and may alternately be tried at first and second as a starter, if Freeman or Altizer fall out in their work.

Jesse Tannehill left Fort Worth, Tex., last night for parts unknown, but is expected back here in a few days. As a gumshoe scout he is the real thing. He covered his tracks so well that he even neglected to tell Manager Cantillon where he had gone. This he was markedly different from Blankenship, who did most of the scouting last season. Blankenship deluged Cantillon and everybody else connected with the club with telegrams announcing that he was on the trail of the greatest phenomena the world has ever seen. None of these rough diamonds chipped out well unless we include Walter Johnson, who was not Blankenship's find, but was induced by that energetic citizen to sign a Washington contract.

Hitt! Keep it quiet. There is a great, undiscovered outfielder in the South Carolina League, playing with the Greenville team. He is being pursued by Hughes Jennings, but his name would never have leaked abroad had it not been for the arrival in Washington of Harry Price, brother of the redoubtable Jimmy, who shone as an outfielder for George Washington University two years ago. Harry is fresh from Greenville and says this is the real thing in the wonder line. The name of the great unknown is Joe Jackson, and he plays any position on the field, is a high, well-developed fellow warranted to emit three thinks to the minute, at least; is fast as greased lightning; and wears a brief and disastrous appearance yesterday. Why he goes to the needless expense of tearing up stockings is not known, but it is probably because he does not wish a little thing like expense, as he works in a cotton mill as a side line to his support, upon which he depends for the name of Mr. Joseph Jackson for the consideration of Jesse Tannehill.

Terry Turner, the Cleveland shortstop who has been out of the game since the Cleveland club was here last, is gradually rounding to form again and may be played in center field tomorrow if Birmingham continues under the weather. We respectfully submit the appearance yesterday. Rhoades had fanned three successive times, and Turner was sent to bat for him in the ninth inning. Turner also fanned.

George Stovall is expected to return to first base for Cleveland tomorrow. He will replace the injured Hinchman, who is suffering from a most dismal ailment, which bears a close resemblance to whooping cough, and alarms everybody in hearing every time he has a session with it.

Milan, of the Washington team, is bothered by a sore place on his side. When he slid into second base on his double last Friday he knocked the scab off and it has been bothering ever since.

Looked like Washington got the best of it when Umpire Egan called Bradley out at first on Shipke's throw in the fifth inning yesterday. Some day we will have two umpires to every major league game, but it hardly seems that the intelligent growth of major league baseball has gone to the extent of getting those now in the business to vote for that common-sense scheme.

The fourth and last game of the series with Cleveland will be played tomorrow, beginning at 4:30 p. m. Then comes the Detroit series, which will be played at the Washington club swings through the West. The way Cantillon's men look now there will be no excuse for them making the rank showing in the West next time that they made when they were there before.

DRIVE IN NINTH
TIES THE GAME

Columbia Skirmish With St. Stephen's Called by Darkness With Score 2 to 2.

Monday's game—Brentwood vs. Government Printing Office, at Capital Park, First and M streets northeast, at 5:30 o'clock.

Captain Moriarty's drive over second in the ninth inning of yesterday's game sewed up the contest between Columbia and St. Stephens and the game was called with the score 2 to 2.

Both teams were on edge, and considerable rivalry was displayed. The crowd was evenly divided as far as enthusiasm for the teams was concerned. Columbia led until the ninth session when Mess got his base on Hanley's lead throw of a grounder, stole second, and came home on Moriarty's slashing screamer over second.

Murphy and Gallagher were the slab artists and while Gallagher had the call in strike outs, yet Murphy worked all the time. He is only a youngster, and considering that he was up against a bunch of old timers, worked well. St. Stephens had hard luck, when Henrich came in on his triple, thinking the ball on the return had been blocked. Moriarty's batting was the feature, and his two doubles did damage.

Chicago scored three runs in the opening inning and boosted the tally by two in the fourth and sixth rounds. Ed Walsh, the spit-ball artist, was in rare form and with good support of which McGuire's men to two runs, held one game in the first and one in the eighth inning.

It was a duel between Sparks and McGlynn, the former having a shade the better of the argument. St. Louis lost by affording their pitcher poor support.
